MOVING INTO SUNLIGHT: DECOLONIAL CURATORIAL PRACTICE AS COLLECTIVE CARE
INTERACTIVE LECTURE BY KATHY-ANN TAN

LECTURE

In a global moment where intersectional forms of tenuous opposition, activism and solidarity continue to be the norm, how do decolonial strategies of resistance and self-empowerment to through art and curatorial practice intervene in the ongoing crises of our time? How can we create a good space for mutual artistic and curatorial practices that are anchored in healthy practice. We will use Audre Lorde's, 'Uses of the Erotic: The Erotic as Power' (1978) and bell hooks' text essay 'The Uses of the Erotic, the Erotic as Power' (1981) as a starting point to discuss how the erotic can be reclaimed, decomposed and articulated by the body as a living archive of inter-generational knowledge. Through a series of short exercises and body-based artistic practices challenge dominant western systems of representation and Anti-racist and anti-colonial traditions of thought. Through the lens of Decolonial Aesthetics, Tan will explore the spaces of the dominantly white western art academic institutions, how can we develop a critical practice that challenges whiteness as property and how can we begin to dismantle white supremacy. We will create a space for discussion and conversation around the notion of 'Decolonial Aesthetics' as a practice of healing.

Due to the restrictions, the lecture is limited to 25 guests/ users. It will happen online and be held in English, questions can also be asked in German.
